The jaguar (Fig. 1) is the third largest cat in the world, and the largest spotted cat. As with all felines, its massive head is perfectly adapted to its role of catching prey at night: since it detects game largely through sight, touch, and hearing, the jaguar's face is rounded, with large eyes capable of binocular vision and with well-developed earflaps. Whiskers are long and sensitive ...

The cult of the cat did not spread throughout ancient Egypt quickly or at an even pace. Because of the diversity of tribes and their differing beliefs, and primarily due to geographical location and social status, new religious ideas traveled slowly through Pre-dynastic Egypt.
